All Riggers Are Not Created Equal

All riggers are not created equal. The question is not how long a rigging company has been in business, but how long those running the company have been in the rigging and crane business. Rigging, by its very nature, is a complex service — not for the novice or faint of heart. No two jobs are ever alike — and even if they involve moving the same kind of machinery, every location has its own unique circumstances, and every machine its own challenges. Obstacles are common and challenges are an everyday occurrence in the rigging business, but it is the rigger's responsibility to possess the knowledge, the expertise, and the equipment necessary to overcome those challenges and complete the job in a safe and timely fashion. The customer deserves to know that their rigger, from management to crew, has "been down the road" in the rigging business, and has the qualifications and the versatility of equipment necessary to handle their project, no matter what may come. What that means is, the customer's only concern should be: "Where do I send the check?"

Rog's, Inc.
Rog's, Inc. is a second-generation rigging company, begun in 1957 by Roger Hedderick, and carried on by sons Gaven, owner; Scott, projects manager; and Vern, maintenance and warehouse manager. These men have been in the rigging business since their teenage years. Vocationally, rigging is all they have ever known. This is not a new venture for them, but a lifelong career. They have assembled a crew of OSHA-certified riggers and crane operators who work together every day moving all types and sizes of machinery in all types of applications. The qualified crew and management of Rog's, coupled with its variety of cranes (up to 100-ton capacity) and its fleet of specialized and traditional forklifts (up to 80,000 lb. capacity), assures its customers that their project will be handled safely and professionally.

Hedderick Properties
Along with its rigging and crane service, Rog's has a warehousing division named Hedderick Properties, with 12 warehouses and more than 162,000 square feet of indoor storage. The 24,000-square-foot Machinery Distribution Center allows Rog's to receive and store machinery until the customer is ready for it. All unloading and loading is done inside the building, not out in the weather.

When choosing a rigger, remember, all riggers are not created equal, so choose wisely!
